Chirality of anisotropic magnetic transitions in ruthenate-based $LaNiO_3$ nanoparticles. We report an unusual epitaxial growth of ruthenate (Ru)-based $LaNiO_3$ (LNO) nanoparticles on a c-plane MgO substrate. Along with the well-known anisotropic growth on the (001) and (110) c-plane MgO, the cubic anisotropic epitaxial growth on the (101) c-plane MgO substrate was observed. In the LNO nanoparticles with nanoroads, the diameter of the ruthenate rods (RIu) can be controlled by ruthenium loading and the growth temperature. A remarkable chiral induction is observed with the growth of cubic LNO nanoparticles, as evidenced by scanning tunneling microscopy, which is also confirmed by a magnetic hysteresis loop of the LNO/MgO nanoparticles. Our finding represents a new class of chiral nanomaterials for nanoscience, nanoengineering, and devices.We at C-Bus are committed to the safety of our employees, students, our community, and surrounding environment. Touted as a "stripped-down western-inspired space drama" by creator Jon Favreau, we were treated to a shot of Baby Yoda, and while this was all great, we didn't see much else of the trailer. We know that the central conflict of the show revolves around a conflict between the mysterious warrior known as "The Mandalorian" and "The Child", a mysterious being that we should expect to see

Q: Convert a list of list of strings to list of dictionary I have a list of list of strings. For example [['blue'],['red'],['green'],['yellow']] I want to convert it to a list of dictionaries. For example the above list should be converted to [{'name':'blue','colors':'2'},{'name':'red','colors':'1'},{'name':'green','colors':'1'},{'name':'yellow','colors':'1'}] How can I achieve this? I have tried using a for loop with this conditions: if type(i) is list: if len(i) > 0 for element in i: print(element) But the for loop does not execute and it prints the list of list instead. A: You can try this: lst = [['blue'],['red'],['green'],['yellow']] d = [] for n, m in enumerate(lst): for i in range(0, len(m)): if type(m[i]) == list: d.append({'name': m[i][0], 'colors': m[i][1]}) else: d.append({'name': m[i], 'colors': m[i]}) Q: AES 256 Algorithm Using Node.js I am working on a solution to perform encryption of a small amount of data via node.js. This is what I came up with. var crypto = require('crypto'); var aes256 = crypto.createCipher('aes256', mySecretKey); aes256.start(); aes256.update(data, 0); aes256.final(); I want to get some input here as to whether the above methodology is a reasonable approach. The requirements are: Need a 256-bit key Need
